Keeping track of all the invoices and their characteristics as well as other important elements that can make-up an inventory takes a considerable attention to details or the use of specialized software, such as Accountant's Friend Invoicing. This Microsoft Access based app will allow users control across a wide range of accounting tools and procedures, all within a single, compact package. Creating and managing financial databases is an easy task Provided that users already have Microsoft Access installed onto their PCs, running Accountant's Friend Invoicing will begin with a company and user data prompt screen. This allows one to either create a new set of credentials or select existing ones. Furthermore, the data path for the selected databases can also be managed with ease. For those who prefer to have all the standardized fiscal data already present, the app allows for that choice. This improves efficiency when establishing a new database, as one will not need to manually add all the different elements. Centralized billing, inventory, ledger or daily books, all quickly accessible After finalizing the database creation, one will be able to access a wide range of tools that focus on handling invoices and a corresponding inventory. Although the application features a rather old-looking interface, all of its features work flawlessly and during testing we did not experience any issues. Having all the financial elements into a single window, easily accessible, makes for a really intuitive operation. If entering a subsequent menu, the program responds by prompting a new window, and we would have liked it better to see an interface duplication, in order to always have an overview of the other elements. Detailed accounting app that puts emphasis on invoice and company data management Not too fancy, not overly simplified, this program is a good choice when the going gets tough and you wish to attain better control over the elements that comprise an effective accounting process.
