Dietary indole-3-carbinol and sulforaphane increase expression of rat homologues of hOGG1, a DNA repair gene, and counteract the formation of 7,12-dimethylbenz[a]anthracene-DNA adducts in rat mammary glands. We recently showed that the human 8-oxoguanine DNA glycosylase-1 (hOGG1) gene is upregulated in rat mammary glands after a 3-week intragastric administration of dimethylsulfoxide-soluble pure crystalline carcinogen [7,12-dimethylbenz[a]anthracene (DMBA)] at a dose (1.8 mg/kg body wt per day) close to that inducing rat mammary tumor formation (1.2 mg/kg body wt per day). Because this carcinogen is metabolized by cytochrome P450-dependent Phase I enzymes, we performed this study to determine whether concomitant intragastric feeding with a high amount of broccoli sprout (BS) or supplemental pure indole-3-carbinol (I3C) or sulforaphane (SF) affects the level of rat mammary DNA adducts after a single dose of DMBA at a similar dose as in the diet experiments. In the regression analysis comparing the relationships between the relative induction level of hOGG1 gene expression and the number of 7,12-dimethylbenz[a]anthracene-DNA adducts (7,12-DMBA-DNA) in rat mammary glands, we found that dietary I3C, SF, or BS increased the increase in hOGG1 gene expression and decreased the formation of 7,12-DMBA-DNA adducts. Our findings confirm that, in addition to the influence of the genetic factor on the repair ability of the host organisms, the pharmacokinetics of the ingested drug can affect the DNA-repair capacity of the host. Dietary I3C, SF, or BS increased the expression of the rat homologues of hOGG1, a DNA repair gene, and counteracted the formation of DMBA-DNA adducts in rat mammary glands. Prescription drug prices have climbed to a point where a lot of Americans are saving their money and putting it towards cheaper alternatives, and that includes a trip to the clinic. With an annual family of four having a combined medical savings of $25,000, visits to the doctor often don't make the cut. That's why full-time day-to-day sex workers in Minneapolis, Minnesota are slowly turning to an alternative. Health care for these workers, mostly dependent on a salaried position, is an issue on their minds. "It's a new field for us," said Sabirah, a sex worker who worked for six years until recently and only works through a network of paid providers. "I have heard that the prices are around $300 a month, and the prices are lower. But they vary on every person." As the population ages and health care expenses rise, people are turning to less expensive and more readily available options, such as day-to-day sex work. This is more common in the US than in other countries, as well as in the UK, where a law has allowed sex workers to set their own hours. Last year, A Growing Number of British Sex Workers Have Changed to Daytime Work – LESS Work, MORE Money – BBC News. The difference between a regular job and sex work is that sex workers choose their clients. Municipal ordinances where it's illegal to offer sexual services are rarely enforced and sex workers often "moonlight" for the side business. "The difference between a regular job and sex work is that sex workers choose their clients. We have to change our sex work hours to suit our clients' schedules, so we can't be working when people don't need it," Sabirah said. While sex work is a vulnerable field, it is also a lucrative one for the operators, who feel like it's a normal choice in their lives. "It's important to add new skills to your repertoire. You can't just rely on your husband as a potential provider," she said. From 2012-13, about eight women took on this career path, according to the National Coalition of Anti-Violence Programs (NCAVP). Of the estimated 3,988 total day-to-day sex workers in
