Look for the tool in the system tray TrimClip can be found sitting quietly in the system tray without disturbing your activity. A right-click on its tray icon gives you the possibility to enable or disable the automatic clipboard monitoring mode, and exit the tool. Working with this particular program proves to be a piece of cake. You only need to copy text to the clipboard, and the application automatically detects text data and gets rid of the trailing spaces. Tests have demonstrated that TrimClip carries out tasks quickly. It remains light on system resources so you may keep it running in the background without having to worry that it affects the overall performance of the computer. On the downside, it has not been updated for a long time so you may come across all sorts of compatibility issues and bugs on newer operating systems like Windows 8 and 10. Browsing History Every Internet user wants to check their browsing history. If you were searching the web, looking for help, or just for fun, you may be interested to know that there are numerous different ways to perform this task. Browse through the following ideas to learn more about how to recover browsing history for Firefox on Windows 10 and other operating systems. When you open Firefox, it displays the history window in the bottom right-hand corner of the main toolbar. However, if you close the browser and need to open it again, you may get confused. Most users opt for creating a new profile or changing the default profile, which changes the browser's default history location. However, you may be able to recover the browsing history if you alter the default Firefox settings to the system preferences. For this, follow these steps: Click on Firefox. Click on the Menu icon and select Preferences. Click on the Privacy tab in the Preferences window. You will find a list of items at the bottom of the window. Click on the History button. Use the Set as Default option to set the browser's default settings for browsing. Click on the Close button. You may select Clear B
